1. The teacher will read for you a story. Answer the questions

A long time ago, when the land was very productive and herds of animals roamed the jungle there was a man called Wafula. He was an expert trapper. He was known all over the land for his power and precision of his traps. Whenever he set a trap, people expected an animal to be caught in it. Indeed, every time he went out to inspect his traps, the villagers would gather in the woods to await his return. They were never disappointed. Wafula sold the meat he caught in his traps and became very rich and prosperous.

However, Wafula was never happy because he felt he could do much better. He was never satisfied with anything unless it was absolutely accurate and correct. His neighbors wondered what they would do to him and his incessant yearning to set the best traps. “There is no beauty in life without a shortcoming", the neighbors told Wafula to remind him of the ancient proverb Unfortunately, they found it difficult to talk to Wafula since he lived a solitary life. He hardly talked to anyone unless it was completely necessary. He did not seem to enjoy the
