SECTION A SUMMARY WRITING.

Read the passage below and write the summary below.

Anyone who has ever been rejected knows how painful this can be. Rejection comes in many forms from an unfaithful friend to a spouse who cannot be trusted. When it happens, different people take it in different ways. Some are able to adjust easily therefore taking shorter time. Others may take a longer duration trying to fight it, their world seems to have fallen apart.

Being rejected by somebody who means a lot to you will make you feel small, worthless, insecure and unwanted. Some people even lose their self-esteem or self-confidence. They confine themselves into hideouts either emotionally or physically. They develop some outrageous behaviours often to try and revenge, it hurts.

Being on the receiving end, you need to try and put things into focus and get as much as possible out of the situation by concentrating on the positive aspect. All is not lost. The problem is compounded if you blame yourself for the fall out. The best you can do is to forgive and forget otherwise it will continue eating you up like cancer, as thinking about it doesn't necessarily help you. It is good to let other person know what you are feeling about his/her.
