THE SCHOOL THAT PLANTED A FOREST

Bahati Primary School was located in a very hot and dusty area. During the dry season, strong winds blew clouds of dust into the classrooms, making it difficult for learners to read and write. The compound had no shade, so children could not play comfortably outside during lunch break.

One day, the environmental teacher, Mr. Musa, introduced a new project during assembly. He suggested that every Grade 4 learner should plant and care for at least two tree seedlings around the school compound. The school board supported the idea and provided seedlings of indigenous trees and fruit trees.

The learners worked eagerly. They dug deep holes, mixed the soil with compost manure, and planted their seedlings. To protect the young plants from goats and cows, the learners built small fences around them using dry branches. They also took turns watering the trees every morning and evening.
