Father: Good morning, son!
Son: Good morning father, How are you?
Father: I am alright. Son, which occupations do you happen to know?
Son: Not all, but I know quite a number. Being a teacher, doctor, engineer, pilot, nurse name them.
Father: Why aren't you mentioning accountant like your father?
Son: Sorry I forgot. I should also have remembered mother's occupation, surgeon.
Father: What would you like to be when you grow up?
Son: I have always imagined myself as a nurse, working with children such as myself, listening to them and turning their frowns into smiles.
Father: Hmmmmmm... that is interesting...
Son: I would also like to be a lawyer; a very good lawyer. My teacher once told me that a good lawyer needs to have good communication skills, be able to work well with people and be creative.
Father: Go on, son.
Son: I shall probably be a celebrated athlete. I shall train and practise for long hours so that I can win all the races. However, my greatest joy will be to help people in my community with the money that I shall be paid. I have read that they earn a lot of money.
Father: That is very true.
Son: I shall become a police officer; yes a police officer... my work will be to help people and fight crime.
Father: Well, you cannot be all those things, son. The good news is, you have time to decide what you would like to be. I am sure that whatever you choose, you will do it well. Your mother and I shall support you as well.
