In a small village in Kabete, there lived a woman called Wambo. She had her only child and daughter known as Rembo. Wambo was married and lived with her daughter in a small house. Rembo was clever and beautiful. From an early age, she helped her mother in the kiosk during weekends and holidays.

“Rembo,” called her mother, “did you clean the kiosk for the customers to find it clean?”

“Yes,” replied Rembo in a soft voice.

When she was thirteen, people started noticing her dazzling beauty. In Grade Six, she already had a group of friends. She spent a lot of time with them, neglecting her duties and homework.

“Rembo, you should know that there is time for everything,” complained her mother.

However, Rembo was the “know-it-all” type. She dismissed her mother's words and did what pleased her.
